The Need – For effective, veterinary controlled flea treatment

Flea control represents a significant healthcare challenge for dog owners and, for best outcomes, requires veterinary intervention and expertise

The healthcare challenge

Flea infestations and FAD cause chronic misery for pets and owners and are routinely diagnosed within veterinary surgeries:

- Dermatological conditions were identified as the most common reason (other than preventive healthcare) for presentation of dogs at veterinary practices¹
- A UK survey revealed, of all dogs attending vet practice, 7.5% had active flea infestations and/or lesions indicative of FAD²

The goal of a successful flea control programme is to eliminate adult fleas prior to egg production⁵
